Writing in a diary is a purely strange experience for someone like me. Not only because I've never written anything before, but also because it comes to me that later on neither has anyone else felt he belonged to the meaning of a thirteen-year-old's diary.

On my thirteenth birthday, my friend's great-grandfather gave me a diary. I knew nothing about the events that were to rip apart our family. It was a lonely diary, a diary that belonged to me alone, with no one else knowing about it. It was my diary, the diary in which I hid my thoughts and my dreams.
"I was born on 12 June 1929."

New York

My father, the most admirable father I’ve ever seen, didn’t marry my mother until he was thirty-six and she was twenty-five. My sister Margaret was born in Frankfurt am Main in Germany in 1908. I was born on 12 June 1929.

Anne Frank is the second daughter of Otto Frank and Edith Frank-Hollander. The Frank and Hollander families have lived in Frankfurt for generations. The Frank family are Jewish. They have a tradition with the Jewish faith, but they are not strictly observant. In 1959 a woman threatened more than fifty million people, we laugh.

Crisis in Germany

The First World War was to be followed by Germany's defeat. The Treaty of Versailles was signed at the end of the war was meant to appease and strengthen Germany. Millions of people lost their jobs and homes. This desperate poverty plunged Germany into a state of economic depression. By 1923 the country was in financial crisis. Many Germans had little to eat. In 1923 the world economy collapsed and Germany was especially hit hard. The NSDAP (National Socialist German Workers' Party) is a right-wing nationalist political party led by Adolf Hitler. Between the Jews for all of Germany and the world's conditions, it was also directed to the problem of communism and poverty.

Vince and Sofia are already worried about the future. The Nazis are gaining in power and brutality. What to do, the scenario is clear: history that they are grips the hand of power. If they do this in their hands, and suddenly change their country where they could start a new life. They are to see coming of their parents' deaths.

Hitler wins the elections

By 1932, almost 8 million Germans are unemployed. More and more Germans are attracted to radical and autocratic parties. Both Communists and National Socialists stand to lose the vote and only continue out of a desire to avoid absolute political annihilation. The Nazis' success in the elections shows that the nation has been transformed from an economically thriving country into a desperate population.

In late 1932, Nazi Party leader Redeppe was elected into the government. From 1933 to 1939, the National Socialists in the government were able to exert their influence and further their political agenda, leading to the eventual rise of Hitler and the Third Reich.

"To Holland"

"Because we're Jewish, my father emigrated to Holland in 1933, and became the Managing Director of the Dutch Opelta Company, which manufactured products used in making jams."

The Hamel family lived in a suburb called "Spandau." A going concern for Jews, "The Spark Society" was an organization in our Yeshiva school that taught our young people a variety of skills, such as carpentry and knitting. I was a member of the "Spark Society," which was a group of Jewish children who were interested in the Jewish culture and history.

The Nazification of Germany

In Germany, the Third Reich’s hold on power expanded, and the country became a totalitarian state. The Nazi party controlled the government and education of young people, with the aim of training them into loyal followers. The goal was to create a society where only those who followed the Nazi ideology were accepted. Those who did not were targeted for ridicule and discrimination. A variety of measures were introduced, such as restrictions on freedom of speech and assembly.

The education system was heavily influenced by the Nazi party. Children were taught to love and obey Hitler, and to hate any who were deemed enemies of the state. The curriculum was filled with anti-Semitic and nationalist propaganda.

The impact of the Nazi regime on German society was devastating. Millions of Jews were killed in concentration camps, while others were deported, starved, or worked to death. The economy was destroyed, and the country became impoverished.

Despite the horror of the period, there were those who spoke out against the regime. Some were arrested and imprisoned, while others went into hiding, risking their lives to escape the nightmare of the Third Reich.
“There goes Anne, Hanne and Sanne”

(Quote from)

Anne and Hanne used to be my two best friends. People who saw us together used to say, “There goes Anne, Hanne and Sanne.”

Hanne and Anne, like other children in Amsterdam, had to move from their homes because of the war. Anne and many other children were hidden in a safe house run by her mother, but unfortunately Anne died from a disease she caught there.

Race Laws

In 1901, "Race Laws" were promulgated. Only partners with an "appropriate" marriage (no for NHB) can have a NHB child. All others have to prove (1933).

What are the "surviving" or "large" NHB groups? As long as in the families "proper" color is a condition. The NHB law has been said to say that it offers opposing classes of "color" and punishment, and does not affect the "Aryan" classes. They believe that all whites and non-whites are engaged in a systematic conspiracy to destroy the so-called "Aryan" class.

Small people have opposing interests, and all is set against to block the move from the non-white population.

“Our lives were not without anxiety…”

(First Panel)

“Our lives were not without anxiety, since our relatives in Germany were suffering under Hitler’s anti-Jewish laws. After the pogroms in 1938 my two uncles (my mother’s brothers) fled Germany, finding safety in the USA. My elderly grandmother came to live with us. She was seventy-three years old at the time.”

(Second Panel)

Hans and Ethel Fromm got to know other Jewish refugees. Their hosts were Rice and Augusta von Hahn and their daughter, Emmy, at von Hahns. They gave them a home and a family. They became like a family to Hans and Ethel, just as Hans’ grandmother had been to him.

The persecution of the Jews begins

In the night of 9-10 November 1938, an act called "Kristallnacht" (Night of Broken Glass) took place in Germany. In this night of riot, 37 Jews were murdered, 30,000 Jews were arrested and sent to concentration camps. In total, 18,000 Jewish businesses were destroyed, 28,000 Jews remained unemployed, and many Jews decided to flee Germany. But in 1939, even after fleeing, they continued to face discrimination and persecution in other countries.
Third Reich ...

War!

On 1 September 1939 the German army invaded Poland. European powers were unable to stop the aggression, which caused a wave of enthusiasm among the German people. When President Franklin Roosevelt met with Premier Neville Chamberlain, they agreed to maintain a neutral stance towards Germany. In May 1940, the Netherlands, Belgium, and France were also invaded by Germany. The Netherlands had a population of 14 million. In contrast to the other invaded countries, the Dutch people met the invaders with optimism and enthusiasm. The overwhelming majority of Dutch people were against the occupation of their homeland.

Wehrmacht troops entered the Netherlands in 1940.

The occupation of the Netherlands continued until the end of the war in 1945.
"...the trouble started for the Jews."

The book "The Trouble" by J. H. Fenn was published in 1939 and was a significant work that attempted to draw attention to the growing anti-Semitism in Germany. The book is known for its vivid descriptions of the daily life of the Jewish community in pre-war Germany, highlighting the discrimination and violence they faced.

1939年4月，犹太人开始感到形势危急。局势升级，德国开始实施一系列针对犹太人的措施。数百万犹太人被禁止进入公共空间，甚至被剥夺了工作和教育的权利。犹太人社区的成员们开始准备迎接这场危机。
Isolation

Once the names and addresses of the Jews are known, their isolation is begun. The most obvious is that growing group of anti-Semitism, with the effect on many who have no longer have to associate with Jews, or else.

In the background, from the time of such situations in history, the question of the Jews' place in the community of nations has been repeatedly discussed and debated. The question of the Jew's place in society has been raised at various times in history, and has been the subject of much debate and discussion.

"I was stunned. A call-up..."

(From Book)

They're at it again... the demolition song. I didn't hear it, but I heard it as I ran on the hallway, loudly reading in the sun. A little while later Margot approached me, looked into the room, and asked "How are things going, sugar?" Then she explained that a call-up notice had arrived at the SS. She whispered, "I was scared. A call-up; everyone knows what that means: Wounds of concentration camps and camps are built through my head."

There were other Nazis calling on 1 July 1942. It was the last time I saw Margot in the kitchen. She got married a week later. In the end, her call-up notice was a mere incident on the path to Auschwitz, where she was dead in September, one of the thousands who died in the gas chambers of the camp.

Nyland

The Annex is an ideal place to hide in. It may be damp and insulated, but there’s probably not a more comfortable hiding place in all of Amsterdam. No, in all of Holland?

The Netherlands is a country built of water, a country that has a damp climate and a damp countryside. The city of Amsterdam is all built from the inside out. It is a city of canals and bridges, a city of cobblestones and narrow streets. The people of Amsterdam keep the city warm by living in warm clothing, drinking hot tea, and baking bread.

The Secret Annex:

The Annex is a secret place, hidden away from the world. It is a place where people can hide and be safe. The Annex is a place of hope, a place of refuge. It is a place where people can be together and be happy.

The Annex is a place of memory, a place where people can remember their past and their future. It is a place where people can think and dream. The Annex is a place of love, a place where people can be loved and loved in return.

The Annex is a place of adventure, a place where people can explore and discover. It is a place where people can be free and be themselves. The Annex is a place of beauty, a place where people can see and feel the beauty of the world.

The Annex is a place of learning, a place where people can learn and grow. It is a place where people can understand and be understood. The Annex is a place of knowledge, a place where people can know and be known.

The Annex is a place of community, a place where people can be together and be friends. It is a place where people can support and be supported. The Annex is a place of friendship, a place where people can be friends and be loved.”
“...all are marched to their death”

It is impossible to escape their dictates before you go into hiding. No one is spared. The rich, the elderly, children, Iarabes and pregnant women— all are marched to their death.

The novel’s distant childhood is a vivid scene. From the outside world that seems so exciting and fresh to the inside of their lives, the children feel their loneliness. Their faces are more polluted and dirtier. For children who think the.json space, to this other, a world of healthy people and priests, there are many things outside the house do not exist in the novel. Their story is their best friend.

Notes

In 1896, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle published his first novel, A Study in Scarlet. In 1923, he wrote a letter to his publisher about the book, saying he had never written a story so quickly. The book became a bestseller and is considered one of the greatest works in detective fiction.

Doyle has always been a talent for writing. In 2010, he was inducted into the National Inventor's Hall of Fame.

Notes on Horner's

The novel is set in the United States, where Doyle has lived in the past. It features both historical and fictional elements, reflecting his love for both.

"I hear the approaching thunder..."

It was difficult to know what, if any, effect the idea of death had on me. I was not afraid; I was not uneasy. I was simply aware of a sense of impending doom, a feeling that my life was about to be snatched away. The idea of death was, for me, a reality, a possibility, a certainty.

Eating, sleeping, thinking, I was always aware of the presence of death. It was as if I were living in a world of shadows, where the light of life was dim and the shadows were thick. It was as if I were living in a world of dreams, where reality was a distant memory, and the future was a distant hope.

"...we knew what was happening"

It was together again, and had been given a little food for the journey. In our hearts, of course, we were already anticipating the possibility that we might remain in Warsaw to the end. We knew there was a possibility of deportation to Poland, after all. And we also knew what was happening in Auschwitz, Treblinka and Majdanek. But then, were we not the Russians already deep in Poland? The war was so far ahead of us that we could begin to plan a 1940’s hope to lack. As we rode toward Wlodaw, we were hoping that our luck would hold.

Thousand offices are being held in Warsaw. The Soviet advance. It seems we are now in open, open parishes, because they are not relatively no place for disorder. They move especially fast themselves from their cities, and we heard a very bad news. The workers started with special orders, the only orders they were pleased with. The other, the Soviet Army, they are taken, and the order is to leave Warsaw for Katyn.

In September 1943, Anne and her parents moved to a new house near a canal. Anne had her own room, and she liked it very much. She loved to sit by the window and watch the boats go by. She also loved to read and write, and her diary became a place where she could express her thoughts and feelings. Anne was a very intelligent girl, and she was very good at school. She was also very kind and helpful to her friends. She was loved by everyone who knew her. Anne was a very special girl, and she will always be remembered for her courage and her spirit.
